“Smart Conveying Technology” (SCT) was developed for quick and easy removal of the stator and rotor without removing the discharge pipes.

Progressive Cavity pumps with SCT no longer have to be removed from the installation for maintenance. The laborious and time consuming work of dismantling pipe work and removing associated equipment are eliminated. SCT components are lighter and easier for maintenance personnel to work on which facilitates compliance with health and safety policies.

- Longer service life of rotor and stator due to built-in adjustable stator
- Easier servicing
- Less downtime
- Lower spare part prices
- Increased productivity
- Lower space requirements, since no space is required for stator disassembly
- Easier handling due to lower weight
- Lower transport costs
- Eco friendly
- Undersize rotors are no longer required for higher temperatures

In September 1997 seepex purchased three acres of land in an industrial park outside of Enon, OH and built an 8,000 square foot facility. Two years later, a 12,000 sq. ft. expansion was added, including production equipment for elastomer stator manufacturing, which began in late 1999. A further 6,000 sq. ft. addition was completed in 2005. In 2008, seepex purchased ten acres of land in anticipation of the next expansion. In the fall of 2012, seepex completed a 55,000 sq ft expansion, including new production, service and warehouse areas.

seepex Inc., now with more than 100 employees, manufactures and exports parts back to the German parent company, seepex GmbH. seepex assembles all pumps in the product range and stocks virtually all the required parts in Ohio. They have their own financial functions, banking and credit agreements, sales and marketing staff, and engineering support. seepex Inc. serves the U.S., Canada, Mexico, Central America and South America.
